Scripting Portfolio

This semester of beginning scripting was a challenge for me. I had never taken a scripting class before, I chose to take the class online causing me to have limited conversation with my teacher, and my poor laptop burned up with the different apps I installed. Despite all of this, I personally feel like I have grown through the tired fingers from typing and the frustrated pleading to have my programs work. After all of this, I have learned to adapt to unfamiliar situations, teach myself a new skill, and appreciate the back bone of scripting and coding. Like a language learner in an unfamiliar country, it was crucial to read codes like a foreign language. This semester, I adapted to creating new sentences in a way and how to create this sentence in a way that my computer understood. I also learned that my system worked a bit different from the videos provided. I looked for help through research and help from friends with knowledge on coding. Coding and scripting was new to me. I had sleepless nights and a couple of tears this year. I can be glad, however, that I vanquished this huge boss and made it pass with a couple of experience points. I will grow from this process and hopefully find scripting easier in the future.
